

The Evolution and Impact of a Rich and Powerful Suburb:

Arlington County, Virginia

Tuesday, Sept. 16

11 a.m. – 12:45 p.m.

Moses Family Meeting & Training Center (TEC 128)

Discussion Leader: Professor Bill Morales

Arlington County was originally a rather undeveloped part of the District of Columbia that evolved into a rich and powerful suburb based mainly on its connections with the defense and intelligence industries. The transfer of wealth from the capital has had a profound effect on Washington, D.C., including the class and racial distinction that characterize both the city and suburbs.

For more information, contact Professor Phil Dolce at pdolce@bergen.edu or (201) 879-9227.

Sponsored by: The Suburban Studies Group and History Department